Miss Benda Tells Of Sheik's Collapse
With Her in Taxi

went to the Lido-Venice; then to Texas Guinan's.

Next, as Marion recites the story, they got into a taxi and started for the Ambassador, when the collapse of the star followed.

"I thought I'd take him to a hospital," says she; "but dreaded the publicity that would result from a lone woman's bringing Rudolph Valentino into an institution at daybreak.

"Then, I remembered some friends of Rudy's we had visited a few evenings before. I directed the driver to rush to their apartment uptown.

"He and I carried Rudy from the cab into the house. The elevator man helped us drag him into our friends' apartment. They sent for a physician. Rudy was taken in an ambulance to the Polyclinic Hospital.

On the Verge of Collapse

"I have been on the verge of collapse myself since Rudy's attack. I feel so sorry for him. He is a wonderful chap. While I am on the subject, I wish to say that the Chicago editorial writer who called Rudy a 'pink powder-puff man' is all wrong.

"Rudy is a perfect gentleman. I have never been treated with more courtesy and deference by any man than he has displayed in the short three weeks of our friendship. He is very masculine. That and a certain boyishness about him constitute his charm, I think."
